Migatronic Automation wins large order to England

Danish supplier of automated welding solutions Migatronic Automation has won an order for two identical welding robot plants for Bailey Trailers Limited's production of agricultural trailers in Sleaford, Lincolnshire.

Against strong competition from a local supplier of automated welding solutions, Migatronic Automation won the order in close co-operation with Migatronic Welding Equipment Ltd. and Migatronic dealer Drayton Welding Ltd. in Sleaford.

Both solutions, due for delivery this spring, include a long-armed Fanuc robot on a lane for welding very large workpieces and a Migatronic Sigma Robo MIG/MAG welding machine. Moreover, they include offline programming, which will make it possible to generate new robot programs offline on a PC and in this way significantly increase the plant's operating time. Two manipulators rotate the large trailers, being held in position by specially designed, adjustable fixtures.

Bailey Trailers have already invested in Migatronic's collaborative CoWelder welding robot solution, but the two new robot plants are the company's first full-scale automated welding solutions. That is why Bailey Trailers have high expectations of this investment, which may result in more robots in the future.

"We want to use the most advanced manufacturing processes. We believe in always looking ahead to the next level of success, and our latest investment in automated welding is part of it. We look very much forward to co-operating with Migatronic Automation", says Richard Bailey, Head of Design at Bailey Trailers.

Already familiar with Migatronic

Bailey Trailers develop and produce agricultural trailers to the highest standards, primarily to the domestic market, but also export to the Scandinavian markets. The company has a large manual welding production with 50 welders employed, who all use Migatronic welding machines.
